Read the following passage , then answer the questions:

The techniques employed by science fiction writers are meant to draw the reader into a world where extraordinary events can occur and unexpected scenarios draw a striking comparison to events which mirror our everyday , real-life experiences. So, good science fiction needs to stay within the limits of what may one day happen . At the same time, science fiction writers' needs to stay away from the genre of fantasy paint a scenario which will never occur .

Readers of science fiction expect to be exposed to a world different from our own , but in which certain physical rules and laws still apply. In addition , any plot as part of a science fiction novel or story needs to mirror events which are familiar to many of us which may include the universal ideas of hope and loss. Association with real-life events helps the author maintain the suspension of disbelief without which , a science fiction story becomes unrealistic and in fact an insult to the science fiction community .

Read the following passage , then answer the questions.

Rami hadn't been to a public library before. He was afraid of disturbing the industrious readers with his heavy shoes . The shelves were filled with books , volumes , dictionaries , encyclopaedias and atlases. He found nothing that was likely to interest him , until he came to a small section of photography, which was one of his hobbies . The books in this section were on a high shelf, so he had to fetch a small ladder to get one down . As he was climbing down the ladder, the book slipped from his grasp and fell down with a loud crash. Twenty eyes looked up at him annoyed by this unaccustomed disturbance. Rami felt himself go red as he picked up his book , which didn't seem to have been damaged by its fall. The assistant librarian came up to him and said in a kind tone, " Well, never mind . But make sure that you don't disturb the other readers again . "
